For our food system you eat 3 meals from the menu each day. Each meal is equal calories and macros so they are completely interchangeable.

You are to have 1 snack per day.

Food listed in the recipes is based on raw weight, unless otherwise suggested in the recipe.

Eating Out

As part of a healthy and balanced lifestyle eating out and eating socially is important. I don't suggest you sacrifice all social scenarios as this will make the plan impossible to follow long term.

Top tips for eating out

Calories are king. Make sure you still get your daily calories correct for the day. You can do this by choosing the smart choice on the restaurant menu so the meal you have is equal calories to the meal on your plan.

If you know you will be overindulging you can adapt your menu to fit it in. You could skip a meal that day for example. The key is to still hit the correct calories that day.

Try not to overindulge and select multiple courses and deserts.

Be fussy. When eating out the kitchen will be able to adapt their menu to suit your needs. If this means asking them to swap chips for green veg then do it.

Just be aware of how many calories you are consuming in your meal as you can easily sabotage a week of training and healthy eating with a day or two of bad food choices and calorie surplus.

Food Prep

Whilst I wholeheartedly believe food doesn't have to be boring. I also acknowledge and promote that organisation is key.

Fail to prepare then prepare to fail.

You need to be organised to get the most out of this plan. If you don't stay on top of your menu you will be relying on luck to bring the calories in correctly every day.

Tips

Multiply the meal quantities for the number of meals/days you are preparing for and cook enough of the food for this.

Then divide the food out for the numbers of meals you have prepared for.

Bulk buy to save money and time
Freeze to keep life expectancy, berries etc

Too much food?

The calories on the plan are calculated exactly for you based on the questionnaire you submitted. I suggest you follow the plan exactly for 4 weeks and trust in the way it works.

If at the end of the 4 weeks you feel you have not lost weight and have followed the plan exactly you can adjust your progress update questionnaire when you have to update your information.

It could be that your activity isn't intense enough, the calories you receive are based on your hours of activity amongst other things. You can cut the hours back in your next progress update so this will reduce the calories. You can then maintain or increase your level of activity to increase the negative energy balance.
